Mitterrand and France Prepare For Another Race — Assembly

By Jonathan Kandell tional Herald Tribune

PARIS - Still reverberating with the news that Francois Mitterrand, a Socialist, had been elect-Mr. Begin's disclosure of his secret decision to order air strikes on campaign — this time, for control of the National Assembly.

According to the Ministry of In-terior, the final results of Sunday's election showed that Mr. Mitterrand had received 51.75 percent of the vote, comfortably outdistancing the 48.24 percent that went to Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the center-right incombent.

Mr. Giscard d'Estaing returned quietly to the Elysee Palace in Paris from his hometown of Chanonat in central France, where he had with the leaders of his parliamentary group, Roger Chinaud and Jean Lecannet, reportedly to discuss political strategy for the weeks ahead. Mr. Mitterrand has said that he will call legislative elections next month in an attempt to wrest con trol of the National Assembly from the center-right and achieve a leftist majority that would support his economic programs. His aides have suggested that the two-round elections might take place June 21 and June 28 after the presidentelect dissolves the National Assembly. But the dates have not been confirmed. The exact day when Mr. Mitterrand will take office is not known either. Constitutional experts could not agree whether the changeover should take place on May 24, 25 or 26. And Mr. Mitterrand seemed in no particular hurry to appoint a prime minister and Cabinet, letting it be known through his aides that the selec-

Unsettled Period With Allies Is Expected for France

French Investors Shift To Gold, Foreign Stock

By Carl Gewittz

ional Herald Tribuse PARIS - France's investors demonstrated their lack of confidence in President-elect Francois Mitterrand on Monday by dump-ing shares of French companies and moving massively into gold or shares of foreign companies.

The avalanche of sell orders hitting the Paris Bourse was of such a magnitude that the stock exchange was virtually unable to open. Very few French shares traded hands — and those were shares at prices 10 percent below Friday's quotation — since a striking price could not be found to entice buyers. By contrast, foreign shares and gold were bid sharply higher.

The foreign exchange market appeared to be relatively calm. The franc did weaken and the Bank of France, for the first time since the formation of the European Mone-tary System in March, 1979, was forced to intervene to keep the franc from falling below its floor rate against the Deutsche mark.

Socialist Aide Vows Investment Stability

PARIS - Despite bearish attitudes in the French and foreign business community, Jacques Delors, a key economic strategist for the Socialist Party, said Monday that the new government of President-elect François Mitterrand will continue to welcome foreign invesiments.

"There will be no change in French policy regarding foreign participation in our economy, inluding by Americans," said Mr. Delors, a former director and board member of the Bank of France who currently chairs the European Parliament's economic and monetary committee. Mr. Delors, who is widely expected to be named to Mr. Mitterrand's Cabinet, said that "risk capital will be essential for future growth, bence our commitment to a continuing open approach."

Mr. Delors relatively upbeat statements in an interview at Socialist Party headquarters in Paris. contrasted sharply with decidedly sceptical views expressed Monday by senior French and U.S. business and banking executives, particularly with regard to the invest-ment climate under a Socialist government.

legislative elections next month. Business Costs Cited

"The victory of Mr. Mitterrand will certainly reduce the optimisin about French investments in general, primarily because the costs of doing business will go up," said Paul Horne, the Paris-based European economic analyst for Smith Barney, a U.S. investment bank. "Rising wage bills, a shorter work week and other programs the Socialists have talked about raise serious questions about future pro-fitability of French firms," he said. Both the news agency Tass and Isvestia, the Soviet government daily, depicted the Socialist candidate's victory as a demand by French voters for major economic and social changes.

In this context, the Soviet commentators quoted a statement by ing readiness to join hands with the new government. Since François Mitterrand could not have won without the votes of the Communist Party, I think that he will not be able to pursue the new policy without the participation of the French Com-munist Party," Tass quoted Mr.

Tass also quoted Mr. Mitterrand rent that tends to emphasize disar-mament and Third World issues as saying that his victory belonged to "the forces of renewal, which have united in a great national upfrontation. [President Leonid I. Brezhnev has told Mr. Mitterrand he hoped that France would continue to promote East-West detente, Tass re-ported. It said Mr. Brezhnev sent a telegram congratulating Mr. Mit-terrand on his victory, Reuters reported from Moscow.

[The telegram said: "The Soviet Union and France, the peoples of the two countries, are brought to-gether by the traditional relations of friendship and cooperation. We want these relations to develop in all fields and to remain in the future a big factor in peace.

Good Relations

["I express the hope that the Soviet Union and France will continue to promote mutual understanding between East and West in the interests of restraining the arms race and achieving disarmament in the interests of eliminating the seats of military conflicts and strengthening security in Europe and throughout the world," Mr. Brezhnev's telegram added.]

Despite the portrayal of the Socialist election victory as a mandate for social change and as a potential opportunity for French Communists, there seemed little doubt that Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's defeat was regarded as a setback for Soviet policy objectives in Eu-

The Soviet Union developed good working relations with the outgoing French president over the past seven years and found in him the West European leader most likely to take indepenent positions in East-West disputes. After the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, for example, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing was the first Western leader to meet with Mr. Brezhnev, an action that was strongly criticized in Washington. As recently as Saturday, the day before the French runoff election, the Soviet Communist Party daily Prayda said that the incumben "stands for the continuation of ties with the Soviet Union in various spheres," and that he was cool to the idea of deploying new American medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe. By contrast, Pravda said that Mr. Mitterrand sought dialogue with the Soviet Union only from "positions of strength." The Soviet press has also criticized the Socialist leader for holding an unclear position on the American missiles, for his support for Polish workers. his denunciation of the Soviet in tervention in Afghanistan and his positions on the Middle East. In their commentaries, the Soviet media focused on the contention that Mr. Mitterrand won because of strong dissatisfaction among government.

French voters with domestic economic problems — and implicitly, therefore, not because of support for his foreign policies.

Staunch Ally

"Observers and the [French] mass media are unanimous in their view that the outcome of the elections was greatly influenced ba the socio-economic situation in the country that is characterized by a high level of unemployment growth of inflation and the general decline of living standards of working people." Tass said.

Mr. Marchais has been among Moscow's staunchest allies in the West European Communist movement, and the Soviet commentaries reflected a hope that he would manage to translate his election support for Mr. Mitterrand into a voice in government policies.

Izvestia forecast that "bourgeois parties" would oppose Mr. Mitterrand in the parliamentary elections expected late next month, suggesting that he would then have to seek support from the Commu-

By Serge Schmemann New York Times Service

MOSCOW - The Soviet press reacted angrily to Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.'s speech in Syracuse, N.Y., describing it as an exercise in "rabid anti-Sovietism and anti-Communism."

Mr. Haig asserted in his speech on Saturday that the Soviet Union's military might, coupled with what he termed its internal "spiritual exhaustion." made it an espe-cially dangerous adversary that must be restrained.

His repeated warnings of Soviet military ambition have prompted counterattacks in the Soviet news media often depicting him as more anti-Soviet than the administration he serves.

Tass news agency said Sunday that Mr. Haig expressed the "glob-al ambitions of the United States with even greater cynicism than is typical for the present U.S. leader-ship."

Vicious Salfies

What apparently angered the Russians especially this time were Mr. Haig's assertions of "formida-ble problems" in the Soviet system and his call for "new restraints" on

Moscow's behavior. Tass accused the American official of "vicious sallies" against the Soviet Union and its allies and of "grossly slandering" the Socialist

"Haig picked up from the gar-bage heap of history the notorious thesis about the need to 'restrain' the Soviet Union, the thesis that has been the foundation of Cold War politics in the postwar years," Tass declared.

It also said the Haig speech showed that the decisions announced at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization foreign ministers' meeting in Rome last week -including Washington's readiness to enter into talks with Moscow on reducing nuclear missiles in Europe — were only a tactic to win public acceptance for the deployment of new U.S. medium-range missiles in Western Europe.

"His pronouncements showed again," Tass said, that U.S. "con-sent" to opening the talks was "nothing but the cover whose aim is to dampen the protests of the West European public and to impose on people a new dangerous spiral of the nuclear arms race." The attack was only the most recent in a series of Soviet commentaries giving a relatively pessimistic appraisal of developments among the NATO allies. Some Western diplomats in Moscow view the news agency's and apprehension among many conservatives. The franc fell against the dollar Monday. But the real flight of liquid assets seemed directed at the purchase of foreign, particularly U.S. and West Ger-man, stocks and gold. No buyers could be found for most French company shares at the Paris Bourse. The government noted that customs officials had been alerted against any illegal flight of capital out of the country.

Prime Minister Raymond Rarre said he would hand in his resignation during the next week or two, but promised in the meantime to "ensure that the transition takes place under conditions that are in conformance with the national interests." Mr. Barre made much of his reputation during his five years in office as a staunch defender of the franc, so his remarks were widely interpreted as a promise that his caretaker government would try to protect the value of the currency.

He said that in the next few weeks and before the planned legislative elections, Mr. Mitterrand would consider such immediate measures as increasing the minimum wage and family allowances and pensions paid under subsidized government social programs plus other measures described by Mr. Delors as "fine-tun-

"It will probably cost more to operate in France, but there is another side — French industry should be showing higher produc-tivity" through modernization pro-grams that the government intends to pursue, Mr. Delors said. This will mean greater interest for the investor, he added. He added that a key ingredient in Mr. Mitterrand's economic strategy is promoting greater profi-tability in French industry, and that he greatly admired the success of France's nationalized automaker Renault and of the state-controlled aerospace company Aerospatiale, whose chairman is Jacques Mitterrand, the brother of the president-elect

The basic idea of the strategy is to develop a more prosperous economy for a greater number of Frenchmen," Mr. Delors said.

Nationalization Issue

Meanwhile, it still was not clear when and how the new government would tackle the highly controversial question of nationaliza-tion of leading private companies and banks. Those firms targeted for nationalizion refrained from commenting in public Monday. "It is true that the climate now is not very good, but we do not expect much to happen until after the legislative elections, possibly not before the fall, hence the continuing silence," said the executive of a company targeted for nationalization, who insisted on remaining anonymous. The first public company reaction will probably surface Tuesday when Jean Gandois, chairman of Rhone-Poulenc, France's largest chemical and textile company and which is slated for nationalization. meets with financial analysts and journalists in Paris, "We expect the question to be raised," a company spokesman said.

Mr. Barre's popularity has de-clined precipitously in recent months because of the mounting unemployment and inflation rates. His statement was also notable because it obliquely attacked Jacques Chirac, the neo-Gaullist leader, who campaigned bitterly against Mr. Giscard d'Estaing before giving him some lukewarm support in the final stages of the idential race. Mr. Barre asserted that the president's defeat was attributable to the "division and weakening" of his center-right electorate by "a fraction of its members"— presumably Mr. Chirac's neo-Gaullists, members"-

Political analysts seemed to agree Monday that a substantial number of neo-Gaullists, perhaps as many as 30 percent, had either abstained or had voted for Mr. Mitterrand, giving him a comfortable edge over the incumbent president. But Mr. Barre's acid remarks, echoing privately expressed sentiments by Giscardists, seemed to indicate that the center-right was approaching the legislative elections in a more divided state than the left.

In the opinion of the defeated president's supporters, Mr. Chirac acted with indecent haste Sunday night to announce that he was ready to lead all the conservative forces in battle against the left.

First-Round Proposal

In a statement conveyed by his spokesman Monday night, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing said he would he steps down from the presidency and would indicate the political strategy he intends to follow "in spite of the criticism and premeditated treason" directed at him. These remarks were apparently aimed at Mr. Chirac.

Earlier Monday, Mr. Chirac again seemed to offer himself as a replacement for Mr. Giscard d'Estaing at the head of the centerright forces. He proposed that in each legislative district, the conservatives agree to run a single candidate in the first round. Under the French electoral system, sever-al candidates of various parties usually present themselves in the first round and the two leading vote-getters emerge to battle each other in the second round.

Mr. Chirac's proposal if accepted by the conservatives, would increase unity in the center-right and assure it a substantial number of

The Communist newspaper, L'Humanite, which had covered the campaign cautiously, ran a headline Monday calling Mr. Mit-terrand's election "A Victory for Hope." In an editorial, Rene Andrieu, a Communist Politburo member, wrote: "This election has elicited great joy in the country. How could we not share it?"

Most newspapers remarked that Mr. Mitterrand's victory was historic in ending almost a generation of conservative rule. Most of the dailies, despite their partisan stances during the campaign, also congratulated the country for its institutional strength in permitting a dramatic political changeover. But in their editorial comments, the publications were evidently eyeing the legislative contest in MADRID — The police raided suspected Basque guerrillas Mon-day after officials said they had balked a planned mass breakout by separatists from Madrid's main jail Meanwhile, confusion increased over the deaths of three men in a car following a shooting episode Sunday with civil guards near the southern town of Almeria.

Interior ministry sources said the jail breakout plan, involving about 100 suspected guerrillas, was uncovered during investigations into last week's ETA bomb attack on the head of King Juan Carlos' military household, in which three soldiers were killed.

Seven suspected members of ETA, the Basque guerrilla organi-zation, were arrested and two guerrilla "sale houses" were uncovered in connection with the planned es-cape from the Carabanchel jail, the ministry sources said.

The Associated Press WASHINGTON - Raymond Barnhart says the 55 mile-an-hour speed limit is a "stinking law." As the new head of the Federal Highway Administration, he is in charge of enforcing it.

James G. Watt spent the last few years taking the Interior Department to court. Now he is running the agency for President Reagan.

Ernest W. Lefever wrote that the United States has no legal responsibility to promote human rights in other countries. Now he is assistant secretary of state for human rights and humanitarian affairs. As a candidate, Ronald Reagan vowed broad changes in government rules and regulations, campaigning on a promise to get gov-ernment "off the backs" of the American people. His appointees are the generals in his fight to cut back the bureaucracy, to guide and, in some cases, to reverse the course of federal agencies.

A crucial element in Mr. Reagan's appointment process is to try to find candidates who will work for Mr. Reagan and not for the interests of the bureaucracy. But critics say nominees such as Mr. Watt, Mr. Lefever and Mr. Barnhart will try to subvert the spirit, if not the letter, of the laws that various agencies are charged with enforcing.

Fox, Henhouse

The nomination of John Crowell . to oversee the national forests "is a perfect example of letting the fox guard the henhouse," said Rep. James Weaver, Democrat from Oregon, chairman of the House Agriculture subcommittee on forestry.

As longtime general counsel for Louisiana-Pacific Corp., the larg-est corporate purchaser of timber grown on public property, Mr. Crowell advocated increasing tim-ber cutting on federal lands. Critics are trying to block his nomination as assistant secretary of agriculture for natural resources and environment on the grounds of conflict of interest. Mr. Reagan's political goals in making appointments are not unusual. When Jimmy Carter took over following eight years of Re-publican rule, he installed a significant number of public interest group leaders to head agencies they opposed during the Nixon-Ford years.

The Reagan appointees include outright opponents of past agency actions, such as Mr. Watt and Mr. Barnhart: appointees whose perspectives are opposite their predecessors' such as construction contractor Thorne G. Auchter heading Occupational Health and Safety Administration; and those with no experience at all in an agency's Safety Administration. Here is a brief look at some of

Mr. Reagan's appointees: · As Texas commissioner of highways, Mr. Barnhart fought the U.S. Transportion Department on a number of matters, including the 55-mph speed limit. "I think it's a stinking law, but I'm going to enforce it," he said earlier this year. Last fall, he termed "unconscionable" federal rules that require a certain percentage of subcontracts

on federal projects to go to minority contractors.

• As head of the Mountain States Legal Foundation, Mr. Watt was one of the most ardent opponents of various Interior Department activities. His tax-exempt group brought lawsuits aimed at more and faster development on federal lands and less stringent regulations on activities on such Conservation groups labeled him "one of the most dedicated anti-environmentalists of the past decade," but Mr. Watt says he is trying to balance U.S. needs for energy and minerals with environmental concerns. · Mr. Lefever, while director of the Ethics and Public Policy Center at Georgetown University, was one of the most outspoken critics of the Carter administration's emphasis on human rights in foreign relations

In 1978, he wrote: "In a formal, legal sense, the U.S. government has no responsibility - and certainly no authority - to promote human rights in other sovereign states." Mr. Lefever says he is not opposed to human rights, and he contends, "We're arguing about methods rather than ends."

• In 1979, Edward L. Rowny quit the U.S. team that was negotiating a new strategic arms limitation treaty with the Soviet Union, saying the Carter administration was giving away too much. Now the retired lieutenant general is Mr. Reagan's choice to head the U.S. delegation to new SALT

WHEN YOU MAKE THE FOLKS BACK HOME WANT?

Who wouldn't want to be in your shoes? Especially when those feet will be taking you to the famous cheese markets, flower auctions, gorgeous canals, windmills, and a Van Gogh or two. So share it all with your family and friends back home. But before you make that call, here are some guilder-saving tips.

SAYE ON SURCHARGES Many hotels outside the U.S. charge exorbitant surcharge fees on international calls. And sometimes the fees are greater than the cost of the call itself. But if your hotel has TELEPLAN, the way to keep hotel surcharges reasonable, go ahead and call. No Teleplan? Read on!

There are other ways to save money. SAVE WITH A SHORTIE

In most countries there's no threeminute minimum on self-dialed calls. So if your hotel offers International Dialing from your room, place a short call home and have them call you back. The surcharge on short calls is low. And you pay for the callback from the States with dollars, not local currency, when you get your next home or office phone bill.

SAVE THESE OTHER WAYS Telephone Company credit card and collect calls may be placed in many countries. And where they are, the hotel surcharges on such calls are usually low. Or, you can avoid surcharges altogether by calling from the post office or from other telephone centers.

SAVE NIGHTS & WEEKENDS Always check to see whether the country you're in has lower rates at night and on weekends. Usually the savings are considerable.

Mitterrand's Victory

Francois Mitterrand has won a stunning victory in the French presidential election. Or Valery Giscard d'Estaing has suffered a stunning defeat. It is not yet absolutely clear which formulation puts the emphasis in the right place. But before the shock wears off, probably some time next month, French voters will go to the polls again to elect a new National Assembly and perhaps provide the answer. In the meanwhile, there are plenty of other questions to ponder about the Mitterrand victory, which moves the French government to the left of center for the first time in 23 years. Before going on to those other matters, though, it is worth noting that three factors left Mr. Giscard d'Estaing especially vulnerable. They are an unemployment rate in France of almost 8 percent, personal imperiousness and a taint of scandal. The extent to which those three things contributed to the president's defeat can not be calculated precisely, but few would dispute that they had some effect.

Now that Mr. Mitterrand has won after 16 years of trying, no one can be sure what kind of government he will form. That depends on the outcome of the Assembly elections. It seems likely that Mr. Mitterrand will have to form a coalition government unless he intends to risk the chaos of governing as a minority. He has declared that he will not offer to share power with the Communist Party, whose support declined sharply in the first round of the presidential election. But he may not have a choice. Jacques Chirac, or anyone else on the right who has ambitions to run for the presidency in 1988, is unlikely to join a coalition with Mr. Mitterrand now. And who else is there?

Eventually, of course, Mr. Mitterrand will form a government. And then he will have to govern. According to the conventional wis-dom, he will try to make major changes in economic and social policy, but with a couple of exceptions. French foreign and security policy will remain relatively unchanged. It will require a good deal of luck, though, to keep the two separate. Mr. Mitterrand understands, for example, that a strong defense es-tablishment must underlie an effective foreign policy. He also knows that the overall strength of the economy and the amount of money budgeted for social programs will play a key role in determining how much can be spent on security. French defense spending has been the highest in Western Europe in recent years. If Mr. Mitterrand wants to keep up the pace, he will have to find the revenues to do it while making good on promises to raise minimum wages and family allowances, and to create 250,000 public-ser-

Another problem area for him could be the Middle East, Mr. Mitterrand is more sympathetic toward Israel than Mr. Giscard d'Estaing and he is a supporter of the Camp David accords. But if he is dependent on Communist votes in the Assembly, as he is almost bound to be, he may have to trade off some of his support for Israel for votes elsewhere. Furthermore, the current glut on the world oil market will not necessarily last forever and French dependence on Arab oil might also condition his responses on the Palestini-

Mr. Mitterrand is not likely to compromise his pro-NATO and anti-Soviet positions easily, but his domestic program and his potential dependence on the Communists could make it difficult for him to carry out the foreign policy on which he campaigned.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE.

The most charitable view of the Reagan administration's new policy on Namibia is that it is too sanguine by half. It asks a lot of black Africa, and much too little from South Africa. Moreover, it proposes that Angola yield up gratis its main bargaining chip the presence of some 20,000 Cuban troops. If that becomes the final position of the United States, the Cubans and their Soviet helpers will be around indefinitely. And the self-evident merits of the Western case on Namibia will be lost in the bargain.

The Reagan team has finally said clearly that it favors "an early, internationally accepted independence" for Namibia. But then so does South Africa, the illegal landlord for many years now of this vast mineral-rich territory. During the Carter years, South Africa even agreed in principle to elections monitored by the United Nations as the first step to independence. Only after the Reagan landslide did Pretoria break its word and come up with a new idea for delay: constitution first, elections later.

That formula, too, can be made to sound reasonable. Why not follow the British model in Zimbabwe and make the future masters of Namibia guarantee the political and property rights of an 11 percent European minority? The difficulty is that there is no comparable outside authority in Namibia to mediate the constitution writing or guarantee a fair election. And if Europeans and Americans are to play that role, they will have to prove their impartiality by separating themselves from South Africa's diplomacy.

Besides, the true guarantees in Namibia, as in Zimbabwe and even leftist Angola, will finally be economic. European interests will be respected by black rulers when that is also in their own clear interest.

Beyond something very difficult, the administration also asks the impossible. A Cuban withdrawal from neighboring Angola is, admittedly, a tempting aspect of any Namibia settlement. Angola's leftist regime has said that once Namibia becomes a buffer, it will no longer need Cubans for defense against South Africanb attacks. The Angolans have been vague about the commitment and it would surely have to be pinned down in the bargaining.

But Washington asks for a Cuban withdrawal as a precondition for negotiations. even while it presses Congress to repeal the Clark Amendment — the law prohibiting covert U.S. aid to anti-government forces in Angola. In resisting this blunt-edged diplomacy, Angola has won the support of nearly all black Africans, notably including Nigeria.

The black Africans, to be sure, have not distinguished themselves by asking that South Africa be punished with economic to their own economies. Nor did they help their cause by having the Security Council refuse to hear Dirk Mudge, leader of the Pretoria-sponsored internal regime in Namibia. By naming one party the sole voice of Namibia, the United Nations has only added to the doubts about its impartiality.

So the Namibia affair may drag on. The real trouble with the Reagan plan is that it allows black Africa and the Communists to blame the United States for South Africa's intransigence. By comparison, Jimmy Carter's diplomacy in this area now looks in-THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Help for Gun-Toters

Forget controls on handguns -- it's everyone for himself. Anybody who has been hoping for new protections against America's incredible bandgun traffic might as well run for cover at this point, because President Reagan - of all people - doesn't care even for the few effective controls now on the books. That's the grim message from Robert M. Garrick, a deputy counselor at the White House, who says Mr. Reagan supports an effort to repeal key provisions of the 1968 act as well to curb the activities of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

If successful, the congressional effort should do great things for the gun industry - freeing all sorts of additional hotheads, mentally disturbed people and other impulse buyers from cumbersome restrictions when they feel the need for a loaded pistol. The bill that Mr. Garrick says enjoys Mr. Reagan's backing would permit out-of-state residents to buy handguns in any state where such sales are legal and would eliminate registration requirements for ammunition. The only potentially helpful provision is an after-thesad-fact procedure that would impose stiffer penalties for the use of handguns in the commission of federal crimes.

All of this is aimed at promoting the simplistic and dead-wrong idea that anybody who is for handgun controls is soft on crime and hard on freedom, that the way to light crime is with guns - and the more everybody has, the better. As stated so baldly the other day by Sen. Steven D. Symms, a Republican from Idaho, "There are 55 million handguns out there, and it's too bad that we don't have more. If they had guns in East Germany, the East Germans would throw the Russians out of East Germany."

Who said this debate was leading nowhere? It's degenerating at a good clip. It used to be about hunting and other legitimate uses of

So while a few more genuinely worried legislators on Capitol Hill continue to seek support for a few modest controls on the sales of handguns, others with the support of the White House will be seeking to tear up what few protections did get on the books in that notorious year 1968. Hunker down.

TUNIS - The Bey Muhammad el Haj died last night, after remaining in a comatose state for 24 hours, at Dermech Palace, near Carthage. He was 50 years of age. Last year the Bey suffered from a serious attack of paralysis. He recovered, but there came a relapse. He will be succeeded by his cousin, Nasr Bey, who is 50 years old. The news was soon brought to Tunis and caused general consternation. The ceremony of the investiture of his successor will take place in the Bardo Palace this afternoon. The French Resident, in the name of the protecting nation, will proclaim the new Bey and will be present at his side during his first reception.

MADRID - Martial law came into existence in Madrid this afternoon, and all stock exchanges throughout Spain were closed. This recourse by the Republican government was caused by a day of incendiarism and rioting that followed upon yesterday's grave disturbances directed against monarchists and convents. Republican authorities have ordered the arrest of the members of Cabinet of the late Miguel Primo de Rivera. who ruled as dictator of Spain for many years. One of the chief sensations of the day was the rearrest of the former premier, Gen. Berenguer, who, according to a statement by Gen. Gallarza, a Cabinet minister, is to face a "very grave charge."

As France Takes a Sharp Turn

By Flora Lewis

P Socialist leader François Mit-terrand as president of France will bring much more than a new administration. It marks a new era. the first time since De Gaulle founded the Fifth Republic in 1958 that the opposition has come to power.

In his final appeal to voters, grimly warning them of "weak-ness, decline and disorder for the state of the sta France" if they turned him out, the defeated President Valery Giscard d'Estaing said that would mean "the end of the Fifth Republic." That isn't necessarily so, and there is no sign that it's what the electorate wanted. Rather, the results showed that I million more voters believed Mr. Mitterrand's reassurances than believed Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's prophecies.

Transfer of Power

But the transfer of power, in two weeks, will certainly mean some far-reaching changes in the way France has come to be governed as well as in the personalities at the top. Mr. Mitterrand will have to dissolve the Assembly, where his side is now in the minority, and legislative elections are now expected on June 21 and 28. So the first government he names will be temporary, to be replaced in July by a team that will have to be negotiated to build a new majority out of the new Assembly.

There isn't the slightest likelihood that the Socialists can win a majority of seats on their own, and probably not even a minority strong enough to govern with support from only fringe groups and independents. The prospect then is a switch to coalition government, which inevitably will shift the focus of power from the hands of the president alone to a more balanced partnership with the legisla-

Communist leader Georges Marchais, formally congratulating Mr. Mitterrand, immediately reminded him that he wouldn't have been able to win without Communist votes and that the party wanted a share of "responsibilities at all levels." But Mr. Mitterrand said during the campaign that he would not accept Communist ministers in

June Elections

Whether he can keep that promise or not will depend on the June elections and the coalition possibilities which emerge. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing's Union pour la Democracie Française (UDF), a party stitched together from assorted centrist groups just before the 1978 Assembly elections with the sole purpose of backing Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, is likely to di-sintegrate now. Not the ex-president but his arch-rival Jacques Chirac, mayor of Paris and leader of the neo-Gaullists, can be expected to emerge as the leader of the

Mr. Mitterrand would win, because she so dislikes Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, and Germany's Socialist Chancellor Helmut Schmidt would doubtless have preferred keeping his special relation with Mr. Giscard d'Estaing. DARIS - Sunday's election of Communists and that Mr. Mitterrand isn't likely to make any drastic changes in foreign policy.

He favors the Common Market and NATO, and has criticized the decidedly pro-Arab tilt of French policy. But he also strongly favors sustaining the East-West "dia-logue" and negotiation with Moscow. The new French president won't be on the same wavelength as the ideologues of the Reagan administration at all.

The campaign was fought mainly on internal issues, and that is where the broadest changes can be expected, in decentralization of power, in switching economic priorities to fight unemployment ahead of inflation, in tax reform.

Michel Rocard, the 50 year-old Socialist who had hoped to be his party's candidate before Mr. Mitterrand decided to make a third try for the presidency and who may be the new prime minister, said Sunday night that France was starting on "a new road" that will be "long and difficult."

Great Excitement

The results have been an extraordinary personal triumph for Mr. Mitterrand, who joined the Socialist Party and became its leader only in 1971, when it had sunk to 5 percent of the vote.

He negotiated an alliance with the Communists which gave the moribund party new electoral credibility, and then built it up to a month while the Communists fell to a postwar nadir of 15 percent. His political aim now will clearly be to continue that drive in hopes that the Socialists can reach majority status.

There are lots of uncertainties ahead, as Mr. Chirac proclaimed in a grave voice acknowledging the results. But there is also a great excitement in Paris, Sunday night, and a sense of almost incredible possibilities. For so long it had seemed that the constitution willed by De Gaulle ruled out a chance of Comparisons aside, the characteristic outspokenness of the two men was the cross both Israelis West Germans had to bear week as relations between their countries skidded to an unprecedented low.

At issue, for those who may have missed the shrill polemics was Mr. Begin's series of personally abusive tirades, triggered by Mr. Schmidt's recent trip to Saudi Arabia, his ambivalent rejection of the Saudi bid for West German Leopand tanks, and his remarks, during a subsequent TV interview here, that the Palestinians "also have a moral claim" to self-determination and statehood.

It is not, of course, the first crisis West German-Israeli relations, and like past ones it is an expression of West Germany's unenviable dependency on the Arab world, its susceptibility, partially self-caused, to diplomatic and propagandistic pressures, and the sheer dilemma of meeting both Arab and Jewish demands, pangs of conscience and West Germany's own national interests.

But the current crisis is unusual not only for its magnitude and verbal acrimony. It was exacerbated by the growing irascibility and political disorientation of both Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Begin, their dis-like of each other and each others' policies, and by a chain of misunderstandings.

One thing should be said to set the record straight.
Good relations with Israel have always been a cornerstone of West German foreign policy, and West Germans have consistently striven to make both moral and material amends for the Nazi past. Indeed, Nine Arab countries promptly closed their Bonn embassies, not to reopen them until seven years later. By then Willy Brandt's left-liberal coalition of Social and Free Democrats was in power and had itself, de facto, recognized East Germany.

But matters scarcely improved.

To be sure, Mr. Brandt did visit

Israel, a step Mr. Schmidt has failed to emulate, a long-standing invitation notwithstanding But the atmosphere became cooler steadily, partly because of the constraints of the energy crisis and the world as it is today, the imple-mentation of those policy goals West Germany's growing dependpean Community's policy on the Palestinian conundrum, and, in no small measure, Mr. Begin's intransigence and unveiled contempt of the Germans.

In a Quandary

In a sense West Germany is in a quandary. Because of the Nazi his-tory and what it always considered its "special moral obligation to Irael," it is open to immense propagandistic pressure whenever global realities or its own national interests dictate a course not to Israel's liking.

It is against this background that Mr. Schmidt's visit to Saudi Arabia and the resulting German-Israeli controversy must be seen.

To be sure, Mr. Schmidt was not at his politcally shrewdest in Riyadh when he waffled on the tank sale, a matter of intense controversy within his own coalition, by telling the Saudis "it is not feasible at the present time."

And his subsequent TV comments regarding the PLO and Palestinian rights certainly went be-yond the policy positions agreed on between the Western allies. But he meant well. Moreove none of this excuses Mr. Begin's fulminative tirades and personal abuse of Mr. Schmidt.

Whither West German-Israeli relations now? That is anyone's

But several things are clear, two of them ironic. Mr. Schmidt's com-ments, and the outburst they unleashed, may well have tipped the election scales in Mr. Begin's favor, much to the exasperation of the chancellor's preference in that contest — Mr. Peres. Conversely. Mr. Begin's invectives precipitated an unprecedented show of support for Mr. Schmidt in West Germany, most notably from the opposition

The official, Jack J. Spitzer, said Friday that he presented a list of 897 Jews who want to emigrate to Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei of Romania, and that the minister "Said he personally would look into these cases." Many of those on the list, Mr. Spitzer said, had already been allowed to leave the country and about 200 had been approved for emigration.

Mr. Spitzer, who also visited Po-land, Hungary, Bulgaria, Turkey and France during a four-week trip, said there was no great demand for emigration by Jews in the Communist-bloc countries of Eastern Europe and that "each of the Communist countries I visited want to preserve their Jewish com-munities as part of their own heri-

Symphony for 6 cylinders in V.

The work opens with a gentle pianissimo murmur, as the 6 cylinders begin the prelude to a drive in a Renault 30TX. The first movement softly introduces us to the full range of instruments, which suggest quiet harmony and give promise of excitement to come.

As the Renault 30TX moves into a peaceful adagio, the 6 cylinders establish the theme in V, which is played with quiet legato. A pastoral interlude follows. in which long poetic passages are interspersed by bursts of allegro, interpreted with brio by the 6 cylinders.

But now comes a prolonged period of open road, giving the 6 cylinders full scope to demonstrate their agility and staying power.

The extraordinary verve of the work is revealed in this sustained prestissimo, in which the sound paradoxically stays continuously below mezzoforte level

For the real connoisseur, this is the movement that best demonstrates the brilliant genius of this symphony for 6 cylinders in V by Renault 30TX.

WASHINGTON - Addiction to cigarettes often starts at a young age, as a social pastime or a means of asserting research asserting rebelliousness. It , therefore makes sense to focus anti-smoking efforts on children and adolescents before the smoking habit becomes regular.

But it now seems abundantly clear to specialists that the traditional "scare" tactics warning youngsters of the diseases they risk in old age do not work very well. Youthful time horizons extend only a few days or weeks and, at any rate, peer pressures to start smoking are usually far heavier than adult pressures to resist it for

Smoking experts, therefore, are developing increasingly sophisti-cated techniques for persuading the very young to reject this habit. Anti-Smoking Pressure

While signs indicate that the national smoking habit is abating — last week, for example, the Federal Office of Smoking and Health reported that the proportion of adult romen who smoked had dropped to 29 percent, the lowest in 15 years — there is no agreement on whether schoolchildren are following the general trend.

drop in regular smoking among high school seniors, from 29 to 21 percent in three years. The Michigan team attributed the decline to parallel increase in the number senior students who expressed disapproval of smoking by their friends and a higher perception of the health risks. These findings echoed a report by the National Institute of Education in 1979. which found — from telephone surveys — that regular smoking was dropping. But numerous psychologists who devise and conduct antismoking programs have doubts about the validity of the national surveys. Blind Math Teacher Faces Firing In U.S. Over Discipline Problems

United Press Intern PITTSBURGH - A blind mathematics teacher has been suspended by the Pittsburgh school district after students pelted her with pa-per balls, tied her shoes together tant to admit it. In fact, they say that when children are first given a and stole money from her.

The district hopes to dismiss Ceinwen King-Smith, 35, a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Stanford University who has a master's degree from Harvard, at a hearing next month because of disciplinary problems in her classes. Mrs. King-Smith's lawyer counters that the district should provide her with

A reasonable accommodation for a blind person is a pair of eyes, just like ramps are for someone in a wheelchair," autorney Harry Gruener said. Mrs. King-Smith, who taught for 10 years in private schools, had several part-time aides but said they were no help with discipline.

Mrs. King-Smith's first job with the district was at a high school in March, 1980. After problems in her classes, she was transferred to a middle school but the trouble continued. She was suspended last month with pay, the district contending that if she cannot handle students she should not be teachniques. "But if you tell a girl her face will wrinkle from smoking, or tell kids that they will not do as well on the basketball court, you might have some effect."

Most of the demonstrations include what Dr. Botvin calls "life skills training" to give children the skill and strength to resist pro-cigarette peer pressures. The children are taught how to cope better with anxiety and the tensions of boygirl relations and, perhaps most important, how gracefully to ask and refuse favors.

To this purpose, a number of programs use slightly older children — 15 years old — as leaders in a kind of play acting. For exam-ple, one child is assigned to try as hard as possible to offer a cigarette to another, who must do his best to refuse. The class then discusses the best ways of resisting.

Results Encouraging

Preliminary results of these techniques are encouraging. Students participating in such programs in Santa Clara County schools in California in 1977 have been followed up for three years by Dr. Maccoby. In September, 1977, less than two percent of the children reported having smoked in the pre-ceding week. By June, the end of the school year, the number was five percent; 21 months later it was six percent. By contrast, 10 percent of a group not subjected to the training was smoking by the end of the year, and 19 percent after 21

Many experts, however, are troubled by the continued high level of smoking among youngsters of lower socio-economic backgrounds. The programs have worked best among highly motivated middle-class children.

Still, most scientists take encouragement from an apparent change in the social setting and therefore the nature of peer pressures. Dr. Richard Jessor, a social psychologist at Colorado's Behavioral Sciences Institute, finds that "there is now a social context that is not only less accepting of cigarette smoking but objects to it. The question is whether this has pene-trated to the young."

Advertising Campaign Dropped WASHINGTON (UPI) - Government anti-smoking advertisements featuring young actress Brooke Shields are ineffective and will be dropped, a Department of Health and Human Services spokeswoman has said.

Laura Genero said Sunday that the decision to end the campaign, which included posters, periodicals and brief television announcements, was made last week.

HHS officials questioned both the way the campaign was written for Miss Shields and "whether she was the best person to get the message across for the anti-smoking campaign." Miss Genero said. She said Miss Shields had been chosen for the campaign partly be-cause she was considered an influunder - the fastest growing group of smokers in America, according to a 1979 government survey.

Europe Air Fares Challenge

Flights Cost More on Continent Than to Cross Atlan S. Inc

By Barry James United Press International

LONDON - "Dad," asks a small English boy in a joke making the rounds here, "where's New

The reply: "I don't know, but judging from the air fare it should be somewhere between Hamburg and Munich."

The joke is hardly an exaggeration. American travelers coming to London can expect to pay as much flying from one European city to another as they pay to cross the Atlantic.

"In money terms," said Lord Nicholas Bethell, a member of the European Parliament who is fighting for lower fares within Europe, "the Atlantic is not much wider than the English Channel."

Restrictive Practices

On Tuesday Lord Bethell will take the Commission of the European Economic Community to the European Court in Luxembourg for its failure to stop fare fixing and other restrictive practices among airlines.

"I am claiming the commission has failed to act to put an end to the way the European airlines quite unjustifiably fix an inflated price for their fares," Lord Bethell said.

Fuel costs and landing fees in Europe are higher than in America, but Lord Bethell and others fighting the International Air Transport Association cartel say this does not justify the vast discrepancies in fares.

Some comparisons of costs for equivalent distances: London-Amsterdam, 63 cents a mile; San Francisco-Santa Barbara, 22 cents a mile; Frankfurt-Rome, 47 cents a mile; Denver-Phoenix, 17 cents a mile; Madrid-Stockholm, 30 cents a mile; and Houston-San Francisco, 11 cents a mile.

It costs more to make the cross-channel hop from London to Brussels at $264 for a round trip than to take the cheapest available flight from London to Los Angeles -4,000 miles - for $238. Lord Bethell accuses the European Commission, which has wide-ranging powers to curb monopoly practices, of net using its powers to prevent fare fixing, market sharing and the chaof different amounts for equivalent servic-

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — As the U.S. wine boom gathers momentum and consumers increasingly turn away from cocktails at mealtime, they are selecting alternatives that enhance their ability to taste, that complement the foods and wines that will follow. Often their choice is a Kir, the quintessential Burgundian aperitif that has suddenly achieved great popularity in the United States.

The Kir (pronounced "keer") was named after Canon Felix Kir, a priest who also was the mayor of Dijon and a resistance lighter during the German occupation of France in World War II. His favorite aperius was a mixture of the white Burgundy known as ali-gote with cassis, the intensely flavored li-queur made from the juice of black currents.

The mixture, also widely known in France as vin blane cassis, had been popular long before Canon Kir began drinking it. But such were his fame and influence during the war years that his name was given to the drink, and today the Kir is found everywhere in U.S. tourists discovered the drink and began asking for it in restaurants in the United States. The Kir became internationally popular and now can be ordered in many countries. It is a standard item in any barman's manual, though the taste can vary drastically, depending on the ingredients.

The Kir is best in its simplest, classic version: one part cassis to three or four parts ice-cold aligote. But the aligote is not considered a noble grape in Burgundy and the wine is not easy to find in the United States, so other white wines often are substituted.

Yet the reason that the classic Kir is such a superb aperitif is partly attributable to the crispness of the aligote. Often it is fairly acidic and it sometimes displays an earthy flavor as well. Its crisp personality, offset by the rich intensity of the cassis, is responsible for the essence of the drink.

Under almost any circumstances, drinking a Macon from Jadot would be preferable to drinking an aligote, but this was an exception. The higher acidity and firmness of the aligote clearly are more suited to making Kirs, and the ones made with the aligote tasted cleaner and more refreshing. Those made with the Macon lacked the crispness that is a

Perhaps this is the reason that the percentage of cassis in a Kir is customarily so much lower in the United States, often amounting to only a fraction of an ounce mixed with six or eight ounces of white wine. Alignte is almost never used for Kirs in the United States, and the white wines that are frequently substituted lack the firmness that is vital r the classic aperitif.

This is especially true of California jug wines. Most of these contain residual sugar, and adding cassis liqueur, which is intensely sweet, creates a cloying drink. The best alternative to aligote that I have found is Muscadet, from the Loire Valley of France, which tends to be crisp and dry.

My blind tasting included seven different cassises and two framboises, or raspberry liqueurs. Some restaurants featuring nouvelle cuisine have been offering Kirs made with framboise in an effort to be creative, so it was appropriate to try them side by side with the versions made from black currant li-

Elegance Lacking

The tasting demonstrated why the classic Kir is so popular. There is a synergism that seems to work between aligote and cassis that is not present when framboise is substituted. The Kirs made with framboise lacked the elegance and complexity of those made

In evaluating seven brands of cassis, the goals were to identify the natural flavor of black currant berries as well as freshness. One problem with cassis is staleness. Because cassis liqueur is relatively low in alcohol (40 proof or less), it can oxidize and turn stale during production, as well as in the bottle.

Flavor intensity is another important critenon. If the fruit of black currants cannot be recognized, the essence of the aperitif is lost. Staleness and oxidation can alter or mask the fruit flavor, but inferior brands of cassis tend to lack flavor identity even when fresh.

One brand was superior to the others. It was the Double Creme de Cassis de Bourgogne of Ropiteau Freres. At 38 proof, or 19 percent alcohol, it was fairly heavy, but the black currant fruit was so rich and intense that the alcohol did not seem excessive. Its color was darker than any of the others, and it was described by some of the tasters as creamy and honeylike.

Four other brands ranked close to the Ropiteau, and each came from the Burgundy country of France, where black current berries achieve intense ripeness and there is a strong tradition of making exceptional liqueurs from them. These brands are listed

 Gabriel Boudier Creme de Cassis de Dijon. Dark purple color. Pungent, intense bouquet of black currants. Very rich, creamy, cious. Slightly tangy and less intense than the Ropiteau, but an excellent cassis.

• Cartron Double Creme de Cassis de

Bourgogne. Dark color. Very fruity bouquet, rich fruit flavor of black currants. Elegant.

quet, but still pungent with fruit. Very fresh and fruity flavor, but less rich than the Ropiteau and Boudier. • Trenei Fils Creme de Cassis de Bourgogne. Very dark color. Fruity bouquet. Rich, full and intense on the palate. Very

The two other brands of cassis lacked character and flavor intensity: Marie Brizard Creme de Cassis. Fairly dark color. Short bouquet compared with the others. Not very fruity flavor, and lacking in strong black current identity. Leroux Creme de Cassis, produced in the United States. Light bouquet suggesting fruit other than black currants. Sweet, rasp-berrylike flavor. (Each taster identified this as a framboise, although it was clearly labeled as creme de cassis.) The two framboises in the tasting were produced by Trenel Fils and Gabriel Boudier. Both exuded more flowery aromas than any of the cassises, and both were ele-

Hamilton's 'Karenina' Weakens in 2d, 3d Acts

By Henry Pleasants international Herald Tribune

ONDON --- If the rest of lain Hamilton's operatic setting of Tolstoy's "Anna Karenina" had lived up to the promise of its first act in its world premiere, one might have felt prepared to welcome, at long last, a new opera capable of sustaining a place in the standard repertoire.

We had had a marvelously picmresque and animated opening scene in the Moscow railroad stastaged ball at Prince Sherbatsky's with music rather more than less effective for its obvious indebtedness to Ravel's doom-laden "La Valse" - and a theatrically telling account of the exposure of the triangle at the racecourse at Krasnoye Selo. It had lasted 70 minutes, but had seemed like maybe half an hour.

It had been, to be sure, more a triumph for Colin Graham's production, Raiph Koltai's designs, Annena Stubbs' costumes and Pauline Grant's choreography than for the composer

Impressionist Works Set for Museum Tour

WASHINGTON — The Phillips Collection of Impressionist works has announced plans to place 75 of its most important paintings in a traveling exhibition that will be seen in four major U.S. museums during the next 18

The exhibition, entitled "Impressionism and the Modern Vision," will open July 4 at the Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco and remain there through Nov. I. It will then move to the Dallas Museum of Fine Arts, Nov. 22, i981-Feb. 16, 1982; the Minneapolis Institute of Arts, March 14-May 30, 1982; and the High Museum of Art, Atlanta, June 24-Sept. 6, 1982. The paintings to be exhibited will be on view in their Washington museum until late May. The most famous painting in the group is Renoir's "The Luncheon of the Boating Party," Other masters whose works will be shown include Degas, Bonnard, Cezanne, Daumier, Manet, Gau-gnin, Braque and Picasso, as well as El Greco, Goya and post-Impressionist Americans Dove, Mar-in, O'Keeffe, Motherwell, Pollock, counting Ravel — but it was still the stuff of which musical theater is made, even to the point of surgesting, at times, the best of Broadway as well as the best of grand opera, especially and appropriately such an opera as Tchaikovsky's "Eugene Onegin." The remaining two acts were shorter, if not by much, but seemed very much longer, and for a simple reason. In that first act we had had action and incident,

Thereafter we had just the prosaic discourse of the composer's own libretto, and this against a discursive orchestra that frustrated the singers' efforts to get the words across, even — as was too often and quite unnecessarily the case at the top of their voices and at the top of their range. There is little that even so superb a production could do about this.

Melodic Profile Lacking

An obtrusive orchestra had been the fatal flaw of Hamilton's last opera. "The Royal Hunt of the Sun," produced by the ENO four years ago. For "Anna Karenina" the composer has returned to a more conventional operatic format with plenty of set pieces - arias, duets, trios, quartets, choruses, etc. - in a mostly tonal harmonic idiom. It is a step in the right direction, but melodious and melodic are not quite the same thing, and Hamilton's set pieces do not have the memorable melodic profile to give them operatically essential self-sufficiency. As one Lon-don critic has observed: "too many notes floating around with nowhere in particular to go." Too many words, too.

The opera — given its world premiere by the English National Opera at the Coliseum last Thursday; with further performances May 14, 16, 19, 22 and 29 - is strongly cast. With Lois McDonall as Anna, Geoffrey Pogson as Vronsky, Geoffrey Chard as Karenin, Alan Opie as Stiva and Della Jones as Dolly — a droll coincidence that Poeson and Chard, like Alexei Vronsky and Alexei Karenin, should share the same first name! — though none of them achieves the kind of distinctive characaterization one remembers from Greta Garbo, John Gilbert and Lewis Stone in the silent film - how long ago? They are solidly supported, if support may not always be the right word, by the ENO orchestra under Howard

"Anna Karenina" comes closer to success than other contemporary operas of recent seasons, and would come still closer with severe abridgment of the last two acts and a thinning out of the instrumentation. Most modern operas are not worth cutting. "Anna Karenina" is.

Swiss press reports said the rescue package for SSIH, whose nain brands include Omega and Tissot, is estimated to require about 330 million Swiss francs ($161 million).

Losses Reported

The reports, which appeared in the Zurich Tagesanzeiger and the Basler Zeitung, said total losses of the company have risen to about 130 million Swiss francs. They added that the company's entire capital and reserves will be written

The share price of SSIH fell more than 25 percent on the Zu-rich bourse Monday to close at 31 viss francs, down from 43 Swiss francs at the opening.
SSIH declined comment on the articles, as did Union Bank of Switzerland, which holds about one quarter of the shares and has been playing a leading role in negotiations for a imancial restructuring package for the company.

New Capital SSIH, which was the world's fourth largest watchmaker in 1980, has reported it lost 42 million Swiss francs in the first seven months of 1980 and has confirmed that a refinancing package is being assembled. The newspaper articles, which quoted banking sources, said the package would write off the present 69 million Swiss francs of capi-tal and 59 million Swiss francs of reserves and provide 100 million Swiss francs to cover depreciation in 1981 and a further 100 milion Swiss francs to create new share capital.

The reported figure of 130 million Swiss francs for current outstanding losses is higher than the estimates made earlier this year by bourse analysts of around 100 million Swiss francs, dealers said.

SSIH's consolidated sales totaled 662 million Swiss francs in 1979. The group produced a total of 5,3 million watches and movements, 23 percent fewer than in 1978, chiefly as a result of growing competition from Hong Kong and other producers of cheap watches in developing countries.

Disarray in OPEC Expected to Block Price Unification

By Steven Ratmer New York Times Service

LONDON - The current downward pressure on world oil prices and the disarray in petroleum markets are unlikely to dissipate quickly, despite a scheduled meeting in two weeks of the Organiza-tion of Petroleum Exporting Countries, according to a variety of oil experts.

Experts agreed that they do not expect attempts by Saudi Arabia to achieve a reunification of prices to succeed at the OPEC meeting, which begins May 25. Without an agreement on pricing, the current abundance of oil is likely to continue at least until the end of the year, analysts agreed.

But at the same time, the major exporters have apparently concluded that the surplus is not likely to grow substantially and that they need not agree to reduce official prices. Rather, they appeared to be responding to the lack of demand by easing premiums on prices and credit terms.

Under such circumstances, producers are likely to begin giving discounts on official selling prices, according to Paul Frankel of Petroleum Economics, a consulting firm.

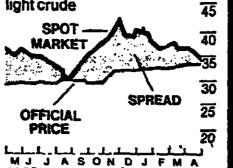

Shift of Position

This may have been one reason why Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, the Saudi petroleum minister, shifted position last week and dropped his demand of two weeks earlier that other producers cut their official prices sharply. Mr. Yamani has been subject to heavy criticism from his fellow promise will eventually emerge in which the Saudis will increase prices in return for an accord on long-term pricing formulas.

Analysts said the slowed trading indicated investors had retreated to the sidelines or moved out of stocks as interest rates continued to climb toward record levels.

With Bank of America, Citibank and Chase Manhattan leading the way, virtually all of the nation's major banks boosted their prime rate to blue-chip corporate customers a half-point to 19½ percent.

Among the largest banks posting the 1914 percent prime were Manufacturers Hanover, Morgan Guaranty, Chemical Bank, Conti-nental Illinois, Bankers Trust, First First National Bank of Chicago and Los Angeles-based Security Pacific.

Despite a decline last Friday, the nation's money supply has grown $6.4 billion in the past five weeks, giving rise to fears the Federal Reserve may need to tighten credit still further.

The federal funds rate that banks charge each other for loans. a major source of bank funds, has eased to the 18-181/2 percent range from the 19-21 percent levels of a week ago. But with the extreme volatility in rates, and with uncertainty over the Fed's intentions on the funds, banks went ahead to the higher prime.

The chief economist for Manufacturers Hanover, Irwin Kellnar, said Monday that the prime rate is likely to fall to 16 or 17 percent by midyear, then rise slightly before declining in 1982.

U.S., Japan In Pact on Electronics

WASHINGTON - The United States and Japan have agreed in principle to lower their tariffs on semiconductors next year, highranking U.S. trade officials said

The agreement came during Japanese Premier Zenko Suzuki's visit to Washington last week, the officials said.

They said the two countries would both lower their tariffs for most semiconductors to 4.2 percent next spring, probably in April. Japan currently has a tariff 10 percent, while the United States has a tariff of 5.6 percent.

According to the trade officials, the European Economic Community will also be encouraged to lower its semiconductor tariffs, currently at about 17 percent. Japan and the United States already had an agreement to lower their semiconductor tariffs, but it was not to take effect until 1987. The trade officials said Congress will not have to act on the tariff agreement because the 1974 Trade Act gives President Re gan the authority to lower tariffs. They said the Japanese have maintained a high tariff on semiconductors as they worked to create a domestic industry that could compete with the United States.

The really big move out of the rate, the price quoted in Paris was ranc, however, was shown by the about 14 francs higher than an franc, however, was shown by the frenzy to buy foreign shares. Such purchases are not subject to volume controls. In addition, many foreign shares are quoted on the Bourse in French francs.

To cite one not untypical example, shares of Siemens quoted in Gold in Paris at one point during the day was quoted at $540 an ounce. The gold marker is subject or, the price quoted in Paris rose to 665 francs, a gain of 6.1 percent, although the franc had declined only 1.25 percent against the mark since Friday. At Friday's exchange investor would have paid by buying the shares in Frankfurt. On Monday, the price was 42 francs - a measure of how determed French investors were to get into non-French assets. Bankers and brokers said "huge amounts" of foreign shares were purchased Monday in Paris. No one would guess at a global figure, although one broker estimated that 70,000 shares of American Telephone & Telegraph were purchased in France on Monday, or about $3.9 million worth of stock companies targeted for no in just one company.

Financial experts predicted that if the run into foreign stocks con-tinued for long at Monday's pace officials would move to control the market by either re-instituting the two-tier foreign exchange market (allowing the franc's rate for financial transactions to find its own level) or by limiting the purchase of foreign shares.

The debacle in the price of French shares could be measured in part by prices quoted in Zurich for two of the 11 major industrial exporters have absorbed much of the production cutback that has re-sulted from the oil surplus.

To be sure, the outlook for prices remains in doubt, largely be-cause the size and duration of the excess of oil on world markets is similarly clouded and depends in large part on noneconomic factors. For example, increased production from Iran and Iraq, whose output has been sharply cut by war to about 2.5 million barrels a day, would add to the pressure for low-

An opposite impact could come from a reconciliation between the Saudis and other OPEC members. Without an agreement, Saudi Arabia appears prepared to maintain production at the high rate of 10.3 million barrels a day, a level that has done much to cause the current oil surplus. With an agree-ment, the Saudis would likely re-duce production by several million barrels a day, which would eliminate the downward pressure on

While it took the Saudis many months to build up the surplus, it could be destroyed overnight, cau-tioned Lawrence Goldstein, an economist at the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation in New

Although the size of the current has been suffering from recess glut is often put at 1 million barrels a day, such figures are not par-ticularly meaningful. What many experts cite as more relevant are the number of exporters producing well below desired levels and the drop in open-market or spot oil prices to levels in many cases below official tariffs.

According to figures by the International Energy Agency in Paris, OPEC production in the current quarter should average about 24.6 million barrels a day, down II per-cent from the average in all of 1980 of 27.6 million barrels.

Lost Production From Iraq Of the total, lost production in Iraq accounts for about 2 million barrels a day, according to private estimates. About two-thirds of the remaining 1 million barrels a day of decline has occurred among the three major African producers, particularly Nigeria. Smaller dec-lines have also occurred in Abu Dhabi, Kuwait and Venezuela. The most important factor in the decline has been the sharp runup in prices in the past two years. That has spurred renewed conser-vation that has combined with recession or slow growth in most industrialized countries to sharply reduce demand oil use was down 14.2 percent in the first three months of 1981, compared with the same period a year ago. Meanwhile, non-OPEC oil sources are continuing to be brought into use; additional development of the North Sea increased British production by 7.4 percent in the first quarter of this year.

For example, in Britain, which

Another factor in the lower demand for OPEC oil has been a trend among petroleum companies to reduce inventories, making more oil available for refining and consumption.

OPEC Deposits in U.S. Off

NEW YORK (Reuters) — OPEC countries deposited a sharply lower proportion of their oil surplus in U.S. banks last year, Chase Manhattan Bank has reported.

But the bank also said in International Finance, its newsletter, that this change does not appear to reflect a drop in the oil-exporting countries' investment in dollar-denominated assets.

"Indeed, it would appear that the trend toward diversification away from dollar assets in OPEC portfolios, so noticeable in 1978 and 1979, was sharply reduced if reversed last year,"

Starchy Clothing Lands Coloradan In Court on Drug-Smuggling Count United Press International

SAN FRANCISCO - Customs agents here grew suspicious because the Colorado man arriving from Hong Kong was nervous and his suitcase was filled with excessively starched clothing. It turned out the clothing had been impregnated with alkaloids containing almost two pounds of heroin, worth $2 million, an indictment Thomas E. Simons, of Aspen, Colo., was arrested after the agents. their suspicions aroused, found white powder in his valise and an analysis revealed the presence of heroin. He was indicted Friday on charges of importing the drug and was freed on $15,000 bail.

THE MEETING AT TELGTE

By Guenter Grass. Translated from the German by Ralph Mar Afterword by Leonard Forster. Harcourt Brace Jovanovica 147 pp. $9.95.

Reviewed by John Leonard

IN fact, the German poets never made it to Telgte in 1647 to talk about language and peace as the Thirty Years War was winding down. The poets were elsewhere, as they usually are. Nevertheless. Guenter Grass dreams: What if they had-conferred, as did German writers in 1947, and confected a resolution? Does the word

No, the word doesn't count. Grass, while he waits around for his well-deserved Nobel Prize for literature, every once in a while plays cat-and-mouse between ambitious tomes. A little book skitters among huge slabs of words. Grass, who is every bit as political as a Jean-Paul Sartre or a Pablo Neruda, and much funnier, suspects the word and the author of it. Everybody in "The Meeting at Telete"—poets and rublishers and Telgte" — poets and publishers and militiamen — really existed, even though they couldn't have gotten together at that time in the 17th century. Had they managed to do so, he intimates, nothing important would have happened.

Silent Lecture

Of that curly-headed devil Sigmund Birken, we are told: "One wondered why so much beauty should have such a need of theory." Buchner is "so in-capable of expressing himself without lecturing that even a silence suggested a lecture. He could be so ponderously silent that his mute periods have been cited as figures of speech." A pom-pous Gryphius speaks "with the voice of a prophet and could thunder even when he lacked lightning." According to Rist, "Logau's wit was corrosive because it lacked wholesome humor. and because it lacked wholesome humor it was no better than irony, and because it was ironical it was not German, and because it was not German, it was intrinsically un-German and anti-German.' "

On the other hand, Logau, a specialist in epigrams, has a large second thought: "The scene of action was of no account, only the making mattered. And that he must condemn Such was the welter of words that they drowned in a purple broth, or stabbed one another to death, though the author's intent was manifestly to indict the royal purple and condemn the eternal warfare of the princes. Gryphius' reason advocated order, but his logorrhea wallowed in insur-

Thirty years is a long war. The po-ets, "without power" and "without standing," would prolong it in order to refine the German language: "Rhymed yearning for death." They "dropped the soup controversy and sank their teeth into phrases and sentences; easily satisfied word-ruminants, finding, if need be, satiety in self-quotation." And: "No one was willing to give up merely because reality had once again put in an objection New York Times.

BRIDGE.

BRIDGE and chess are among the few recreational activities in which it is possible, though admittedly most unusual, to be a world-class performer for half a century. Chessplayers can point to the great Samuel Reshevsky, while bridge-players can point to, among others, B. Jay Becker. Both men, in their own fields, are the epitome of remorseless efficiency, grinding down their opponents by solid accuracy without any artificial striving for brilliance.

Back in 1932 a young man named. Becker won a national title in the United States in his first year of tournament play. Recently in Detroit he won the Vanderbilt Knockout Teams for the eighth time, adding to a collec-tion that includes seven Spingold ti-tles, eight Reisinger titles and two world team titles. He is now almost 77; and the oldest man ever to win a major national event. Next year he will represent the United States in the Rosenbloom Cup in Biarritz, France, and become the oldest man ever toplay in a world championship.

This was his first appearance at a national tournament for five years, but his technical accuracy, alertness and stamina seem quite unimpaired and would be the envy of many men 20 years younger. It will be no surprise if he continues to win titles in his 80s. The Vanderbilt result was highly popular with the bridge community. It represented a return to the winner's circle for this Grand Old Man of Bridge who has always been admired and respected for his quiet demeanor and impeccable manners at the table, setting an example that many volatile younger players would do well to imi-

He is known to all his friends as "Mr. Becker" not simply out of respect, of which there is plenty, but for a historical reason. As a young manhe played with P. Hal Sims, a dynamic star of those days who castigated his partners severely when anything went wrong. "Becker," he would cry, "you idiot, you imbecile," and go on Eventually Becker took his partner aside and pointed out that they could not expect to have a successful partnership unless he received some consideration and respect. Next time. therefore, the tirade began: Becker, you idiot, you imbecile Since Sims, however, nobody has even considered describing "Mr. Becker." as an idiot or anything else uncompli-

In Detroit, Becker was called on to play alternately with his son, Michael Becker, and with Edgar Kaplan. In the final 16 deals of the event he played with Kaplan, trying to protect a 25-point lead against a powerful

Lietzke Wins Playoff for Nelson Title From Agency Dispatches

DALLAS - Bruce Lietzke tapped in a short par putt on the first hole of a sudden-death playoff Sunday to defeat Tom Watson and win the Byron Nelson Classic golf tournament.

Lietzke's victory kept Watson from matching the record of Walter Hagen by winning the same tournament four times in a row. Hagen won the PGA tournament four straight times, and Watson had won the past three Byron Nel-

The brand of basketball being played by the Houston Rockets may not be stylish, but it certainly has been effective. Boards, Defense, Control

The Rockets, only 40-42 during the regular season and seeking to become the first team with a losing record to win a National Basketball Association championship, have split the first four games of the title series with the Boston Celties by hitting the boards hard, playing gritty defense and carefully controlling each game's tempo. They bounced back from Saturday's 94-71 embarrassment with a solid performance Sunday, when a 28-17 edge off the offensive boards helped them to a 91-86 victory. "I'm starting to think this is a fairy tale that's going to come true," said Rocket forward Robert

Reid, who has hounded Celtic star Larry Bird throughout the series, limiting him to 53 points in four games - 8 in each of the last two. "If the Rockets had lost the fourth game," said Bird, "they'd have been next to dead. Now it's down to a miniseries. "Our offense needs some punch.

I'm going to have to have to start looking to score more," he conceded. "I'm not talking about fighting.

Mirror-Free

"Please don't ask me for a technical explanation," said Houston Coach Harris, "It's just tough bas-ketball — no frills, no tricks. No múrrors.

If Rocketball were held up to a mirror it would look ugly, says Paultz, Houston's 6-foot-11 forward, who has been in the playoffs in each of his 11 pro seasons. "A lot of people ridicule the game we play," said Paultz, "but you don't have to go back too far to see how many champions played like this.

"We're going to do unto others in the rest of this series as they've done unto us so far."

Harris blanched. He prefers referees to call games close and protext his Moses Malone from taking a beating. "If it gets any more physical, we're going to have to go out there with flack jackets," he said. "It's as rugged as it can get without calling out the National Guard.

The only guards the Rockets needed in Game 4 were Mike Dunleavy and Tom Henderson. Harris decided to use only six players, with forward Bill Wil-loughby the lone reserve seeing ac-tion. Guards Calvin Murphy and Allen Leavell never got off the bench.

'Track Shoes'

"I don't know how they can win using only six guys," said Celtic forward Cedric Maxwell. "I never thought I'd see a championship team doing that. If they stick with it, they'd better get out their track shoes because we're going to run those six guys." There were no Game 4 complaints from Malone, the Rockets' veoman center who played the full 22 rebounds. "If coach wants you to play 48 minutes," said Malone "you've got to do it. "I'm in shape."

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Across the country, many high school and college football coaches may be reconsidering their relationships with their players.

The reason is the recent $2.2million lawsuit that was brought against Frank Kush, the former Arizona State coach, by Kevin Rutledge, a former punter. Rutledge accused Kush of punching him in the face on the sideline during a game in 1978 and verbally abusing him in an attempt to run him off the team.
Kush won both phases of the suit - the alleged punching incident and the alleged verbal abuse — by 5-to-3 votes from a Superior Court jury in Phoenix. But even as Kush's lawyer, Warren Platt, described the results of the case as a vindication for "athletics in general," some coaches read more significance into the verdicts. "It's hard to see the outcome as a victory for anyone," said Vic Gatto, the head coach at Tufts University in Medford, Mass. "The fact that the trial was held said something for that style of coaching."

Litigation-Happy "The only significance I se said George Welsh of Navy, "is that it's like everything eise in the country that goes to litiga-tion. I don't know why we have to take everything to court." Gatto will start his fourth year at Tufts this fall. The verdict symbolized the country's conservative mood, he said, an atti-tude that differs considerably from his era as a 1969 graduate of Harvard and then a coach at the Middlesex School in Concord, Mass., and Bates College.

"Players have an authoritarian fix now," said Gatto, who was in the famed 29-29 tie game with Yale in 1968. "The level of commitment by athletes is back to the 50s.

"They're much less willing to join in the process of decisionmaking. I have to set up the agenda for them." George Davis was a high 1960s by allowing his players to vote on the starting lineup. His teams at St. Helena High won 45 games in a row, a state record, using this method.

"I don't think a coach should hit a kid," said Davis, who cur-rently teaches English in Willits.

Haden: The Insider Speaks Out

put your arm around a kid and say. 'Hey, you'll get it the next time.' Hitting him will only get you 26 yards." Rutledge punted poorly preceding the alleged incident with Kush. Kush denied that he had them with lengths of rope. Asked if he felt the verdict would be taken as a vindication of the coaching fraternity, as Kush's lawyers implied, Davis replied, "some coaches probably do. I know they would have got-ten upset if Rutledge had won. The political climate we're in now is conducive to Kush winning, not Rutledge. But it's still no excuse to hit a kid, if he did." Bo Schembechler once played for Woody Hayes, the former Ohio State coach whose career suffered after a series of turbulent sideline episodes capped by a punching incident with a Clemson player in the 1978 Gator Bowl "When someone accepts a grant-in-aid and goes to a partic-

 Little League leaders yelling at their players — "not for them, at them." Coaches breaking contracts to take better jobs.

 Colleges and "supposedly respectable" owners of pro teams going back on their word and firing • The unreasonable pressure on coaches and players of most college teams to win, "as aplied by the alumni, the administration and the communi-

• Other fans cheering Haden's injury "when it was announced on the scoreboard." The thing that disturbs me most about Kush and Hayes," says Haden, "is that they're only a part of this whole disturbing picture."

Now in his last year of law school, Haden, a sixyear NFL veteran, agreed with others interviewed that physical abuse continues to be a part of foot-

Coach] John Robinson has a couple of good ones. He thinks coaches should have tenure, the same as professors, and should be paid the same as professors - no more and no less. "But in the area we're talking about, most solutions aren't that easy to come by. The most import-it thing right now, it seems to me, is to recognize that we in America today have a sports problem. Haden, 27, said he has been physically abused by only one coach, "and that was way back in Little League." He added: "I've been lucky, I guess, but I've seen coaches lose their temper and yell at young players, and I don't think that's all that nec-Unhappily, the wrong things - including whatever it takes to win — are condoned by American society. Haden said. "Sports have always been a big part of my life." he said, "but I'm frankly pessimis-

"The real problem is that not enough of us recognize that, as [psychologist] Thomas Tutko said about the values of fun and games, it isn't the product that's important. It's the process."

"In different ways. I can remember every vote of every politician in the United States. When I decide he isn't one of us, I start sending out letters to his constituents, telling them what a rotten no-goodnik he really is."

"And that does him in?" "No, that's just a letter asking for money to defeat him in the next election."

"So people send you checks?" "You wouldn't believe it. I can write a letter that can scare the hell out of anyone in this country.

Dame Cicely Saunders

Founder of Movement to Bring Dignity to Dying Will Be Honored Today at Buckingham Palace

By Elaine Davenport Insernational Herald Tribune

T ONDON - Hospice care - in which L pain, suffering and death are dealt with scientifically and compassionately - has become (ashionable.

The movement's founder, Dr. Cicely Saunders, became Dame Cicely in the 1980 New Year's Honors List. And today she receives the £90,000 Templeton Foundation Prize for Progress in Religion, in a ceremony at Buckingham Palace.
The hospice movement's rise began in earnest with the publicity surrounding Victor and Rosemary Zorza's book, "A Way to Die," which described the death of their young daughter from cancer, and how the hospice she was in made her terminal illness bearable not just for her, but for her family.

That was in 1978. Although hospices of some sort have existed for decades, the Zorzas' book, in effect, let death out of the closet, and now there are 50 or more hospices in Britain. In the United States, the National Hospice Organization has been set up to oversee the sudden surge in interest.

Does its recent rise in status worry the movement's founder? "I would be unhappy if somebody used the term as a fashionable bame Cicely said in her office at St. Christopher's Hospice in Sydenham, southeast London. "Hospice is a medical program, a particular standard of care, and if the public can be reassured that dying isn't going to be iso-lated and painful and that it is an important part of living, then that's why I went into the field in the first place."

Dame Cicely, now 63, was a nurse and social worker until she was 33, when she decided to concentrate on dying patients, which meant learning about pain. She was advised to train as a doctor, which took seven years, and then began working at St. Joseph's Hospice in 1958.

"I was looking at the regular giving of drugs, at tolerance and increase of doses," she said. "One of the reasons for raising the money for St. Christopher's was to do objective research into pain, which had scarcely been done.

"About 75 percent of the patients who get sent to us have pain severe enough to need narcotics to control it," Dame Cicely said. "From my initial work at St. Joseph's, I learned that you can use drugs to control pain for one to two years, and that increasing the dosage simply is not a problem. A five-year study at St. Christopher's has confirmed

St. Christopher's, founded in 1967, is a charity and was built entirely with gifts and grants and relies upon them for much of its running costs. But the National Health Service supports its teaching, home care (usually at least half the patients are at home), and research programs (the two current studies involve anti-depressant drugs and steroids in terminal care), as well as maintaining 40 of the 62 beds in the wards. The cost of patient care is approximately half that of a comparable hospital. There is also an old people's wing, funded mostly by local authorities.

The hospice staff spends hours analyzing in detail why each patient is sick, and exactly where the pain is. They know that pain can be controlled in many ways.

"We don't feel we ought to look at new drugs," Dame Cicely said, "but at ones that are available to everybody. Many of the widely used ones haven't had the detailed scientific attention they should have had, and we hope to find basic principles which people can interpret wherever they are."

There is the emotional pain. "We listen to anxieties and treat depression," she said. "A lot of our patients may worry about leaving young families, or feel dissatisfied with their life and find it difficult to cope with its coming to an end, or wives may worry that their husbands cannot cope when they leave, or just tangled family relationships. We spend a great deal of time with the families and think there exists a spiritual pain, a sort of unformed feeling which reaches out for truth, forgiveness and certainly meaning."

This spiritual emphasis reflects the predominantly Christian nature of St. Christopher's, but patients and staff of any or no denomination are welcome. Dame Cicely points out that both the founding patient and the chairman are Jewish. The Templeton money has already been earmarked: £10,000 will go toward next year's international hospice conference and 280,000 will start a fund for a day center.

"The Department of Health and Social Security's recent working party on terminal care recommended that hospices should study how to make home care more effective, and I think a day center is one of the ways," Dame Cicely said. "We know we have lonely, elderly, bereaved people who need follow-up and help, and we know that there are people with long-term illnesses who could come here for a day of group discussion and other activ-

Dame Cicely sees St. Christopher's not as a leader but as a coordinating catalyst for the country's hospices. The many newer hospices, she says, "are all busy showing they can do just as well as we can, which is line. We didn't set out to say you can only do hospice work this way. We want to open doors, not close them."

Doors are certainly opening. There are hospices, or their beginnings, in the United States, Canada, South Africa, the Netherlands, Sweden, India, Cyprus, Norway, Switzerland and Israel. Dame Cicely writes and

This dwelling on what are, to some, ghoul-ish subjects fuels the movement which makes people happy to die, and perhaps, it is said. akes away any fight left in them.

"Our discharge rate has gotten bigger over the years." Dame Cicely countered. "We're interested in what the patient is doing with the rest of his life, and occasionally the life is much longer than anyone expected. We're not controlling symptoms purely for the sake of saying this patient is pain free. We're in-terested in well controlled symptoms leading to unexpected remission. We do have the hig arrow, so to speak, going toward ease in dy-ing, but there's the little arrow back, of people who get better. And that little arrow is getting bigger."

Dame Cicely has little if any time for Exit. the British group which ran into legal opposi-tion for providing information on committing suicide, and for Exit's U.S. equivalent, Hemlock.

"I personally believe that bringing any law into the field of suicide would be tremendously undermining to a huge number of volnerable people. Any kind of a right to a quick out. I wouldn't deny there are hard cases, but I don't think that is the answer. I've often quoted an old lady who wrote an article in the London Times saying human nature being what it is euthanasia wouldn't be voluntary for long."

Dame Cicely is aware that "we're not just one long lovely success story. It's more real than that. People who are dying whether through just dogged endurance or in fact making it an achievement through reconciliation, have got an amozing effect on the people around them. Through not running away, but sorting things out, there's tremendous growth. It's a community of the unlike, but it's working. And we're trying to go on learnPEOPLE: Leontyne Price, raws. there were five telephoned threats on her life. A spokesman for the firm that handles licensing of Cartland-designed home decorating products said the 79-year-old author, step-grandmother to Prince Charles' fiancee, Lady Diana Speneer, did not receive any of the threats personally. Rod Pleasants of Kirk Brummel Inc., said, "All calls were made by a male who warned that if Miss Cartland wanted to live she should get out of the country immediately. Miss Cartland did not leave until the day she had planned to leave, how-ever." He said the novelist felt the threats stemmed from a television interview she had on television with Pia Lindstrom. The interview was interspersed with news clips concerning turmoil in Ireland and pictures of the late Bobby Sands. With a flutter of flowery phrases from London's lord mayor and other dignitaries, the "official souvenir" for the July 29 wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer was introduced.
